Graph & Report of Feedback of Parents

Q1. How do you like the PTM?

Based on the provided data from a parent-teacher meeting (PTM), the responses from parents regarding their experience can be interpreted in several key ways. Here's a detailed interpretation of the data:

Positive Reception

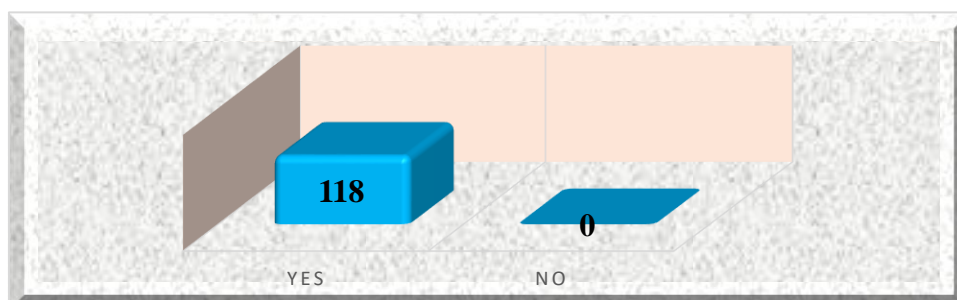

A significant majority of parents, 90 out of the total respondents, reported that they found the PTM to be "good." This indicated a strong positive reception among the parent community, suggesting that the meeting met or exceeded their expectations. The "good" response likely reflects parents' satisfaction with various aspects of the PTM, including the organization, communication, and the quality of interactions with teachers.

Adequate Satisfaction

A smaller, yet notable, group of parents, 28 respondents, described their experience as "satisfactory." While these parents did not rate the PTM as "good," their "satisfactory" rating indicated that the meeting met the basic requirements and fulfilled its purpose, though there were areas that need to be improved. This feedback is valuable as it suggested that while the overall reception is positive, there is room for enhancement in certain areas to elevate these satisfactory experiences to good ones.

The combined data shows that out of the total 118 respondents, approximately 76.3% rated the PTM as "good," and 23.7% rated it as "satisfactory." This distribution reflects a generally positive trend, with a clear majority of parents being pleased with the PTM. However, it also highlighted that nearly a quarter of parents see potential for improvement.

Q2. Will you attend this type of meeting in future?

Based on the responses from parents regarding their willingness to attend future parent-teacher meetings (PTMs), the data revealed an overwhelmingly positive attitude towards these meetings. Here's a detailed interpretation of this data:

Universal Approval

All 118 respondents indicated that they would attend this type of meeting in the future, with none expressing a lack of interest. This unanimous positive response signifies a high level of approval and satisfaction with the PTMs, suggesting that parents find significant value in these interactions.

Commitment to Engagement

The fact that every parent responded with a "yes" highlighted a strong commitment to being involved in their children's education. This commitment is crucial for fostering a collaborative environment between the school and parents, which lead to better educational outcomes for the students. It reflected the parents' recognition of the importance of staying informed and engaged with their student's academic progress and institution activities.

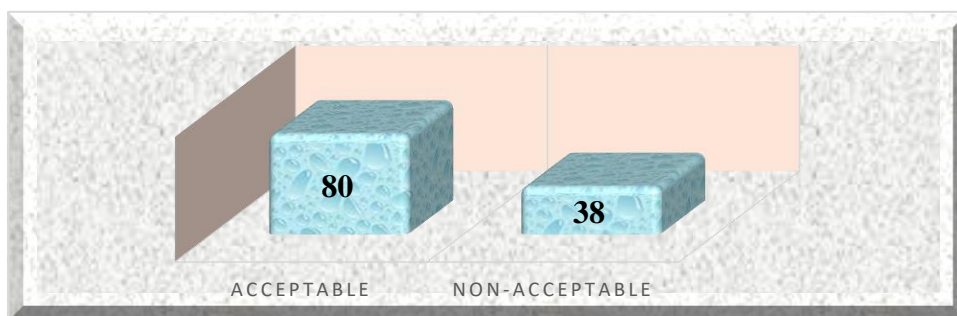

Positive Feedback Loop

Such a unanimous response were seen as a positive feedback loop, where the parents' positive experiences and the perceived benefits of the PTM encourage continued participation. This consistent attendance allows for ongoing dialogue between parents and teachers, enhancing the partnership in the educational process and providing continuous support for the students.

Impact on School Policies

The institution take this feedback as a strong endorsement of their current approach to organizing PTMs. It suggested that the format, content, and execution of the meetings are well-received and meet the needs and expectations of the parents. In summary, the data reflected an unequivocal endorsement of the PTMs by the parents, with all respondents expressing their willingness to attend future meetings. This indicated a successful execution of these meetings, fostering a strong partnership between the school and the parents. The institution should continue to build on this positive momentum, ensuring that the PTMs remain an effective tool for engaging parents and supporting students' educational journeys.

Q3. What is your opinion about present exam system?

The responses from parents regarding their opinion on the current exam system in college, with 80 finding it acceptable and 38 finding it non-acceptable, offer significant insights into the perceptions and concerns of the parent community. Here's a detailed interpretation of the data:

Majority Finds the System Acceptable

A majority of parents, 80 out of 118, consider the present exam system acceptable. This indicated that a substantial portion of the parent community believes that the existing system meets the necessary standards of fairness, rigor, and effectiveness. Parents who find the system acceptable likely feel that it provides a reliable measure of their children's knowledge and abilities, supports academic integrity, and is administered in a transparent and equitable manner.

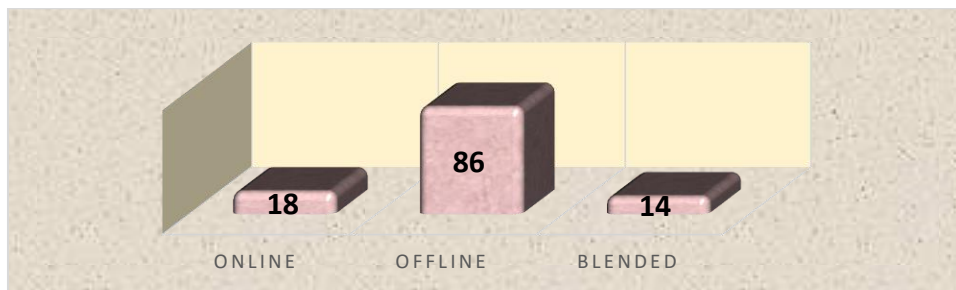

Significant Minority Expresses Dissatisfaction

Conversely, 38 parents, which constitutes a significant minority, find the current exam system non-acceptable. This suggests that nearly one-third of the respondents have concerns or dissatisfaction with how exams are conducted. Their concerns range from issues with the exam format, perceived biases, stress levels induced by exams, or the overall impact on student learning and well-being.

The data highlighted the need for the college administration and faculty to carefully evaluate the existing exam system. While the majority acceptance indicated that many elements of the system are functioning well. Addressing these concerns is essential for ensuring that all students have a fair and supportive assessment environment.

This feedback indicates that while the system is generally functioning well for many, there are substantial areas for improvement. By addressing the concerns of the dissatisfied minority and enhancing the system based on this feedback, the college can work towards creating a more equitable, effective, and supportive assessment environment for all students.

Q4. Which mode of study you prefer most?

The responses from parents regarding their preferred mode of study, with 18 preferring online, 86 preferring offline, and 14 preferring blended learning, offer valuable insights into parental attitudes towards different educational formats. Here's a detailed interpretation of the data:

Strong Preference for Offline Learning

A significant majority of parents, 86 out of 118, expressed a preference for offline (traditional, in-person) learning. This indicated that many parents value the benefits of face-to-face education, which include direct interaction with teachers, structured classroom environments, and opportunities for social engagement and collaboration among students. Parents who favor offline learning believe that it provides a more comprehensive and effective educational experience, with better discipline, focus, and fewer distractions compared to online learning.

Limited Preference for Online Learning

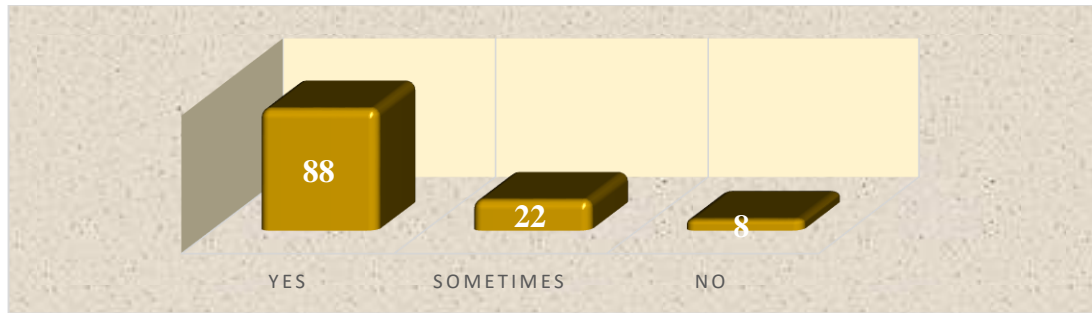

A smaller portion of the parents, 18 out of 118, prefer online learning. This group likely appreciates the flexibility and convenience that online education offers. Parents who favor online learning might value the ability for students to learn at their own pace, access a wide range of resources, and avoid the time and costs associated with commuting. However, the relatively low preference for this mode suggested that many parents have concerns about the effectiveness, engagement levels, and social aspects of online education.

Interest in Blended Learning

A minority of parents, 14 out of 118, expressed a preference for blended learning, which combines both online and offline methods. This indicated a recognition of the potential benefits of integrating digital tools with traditional classroom experiences. Blended learning offers a balanced approach, allowing students to enjoy the flexibility and resource-rich environment of online learning while also benefiting from direct interaction and structured classroom settings. Parents who prefer this mode believe it provides the best of both worlds, enhancing learning outcomes through a more diverse and adaptable approach.

Therefore the data reveals a strong parental preference for offline learning, with a significant minority showing interest in online and blended modes. This feedback underscores the value parents place on traditional, in-person education while also recognizing the potential benefits of integrating digital tools. Educational institutions should consider these preferences when designing their curricula and teaching strategies, aiming to create a balanced and effective learning environment that meets the diverse needs of their student population.

Q5. Do you have internet access?

The responses from parents regarding their internet access, with 88 having consistent access, 22 having intermittent access, and 8 having no access, provide important insights into the digital divide and its potential impact on educational experiences. Here's a detailed interpretation of the data:

Predominant Internet Access

A majority of parents, 88 out of 118, reported having reliable internet access. This high percentage indicated that most families are well-equipped to engage with online resources and digital communication tools. These parents likely benefit from the conveniences and opportunities that consistent internet access provides, such as accessing online learning platforms, communicating with teachers, and staying updated with school announcements and events.

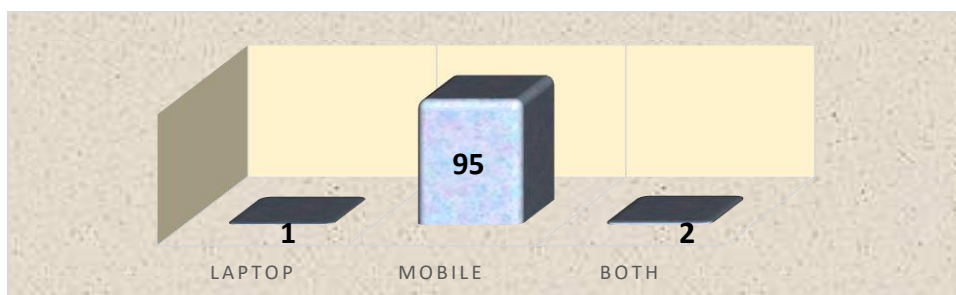

Intermittent Internet Access

A significant minority of parents, 22 out of 118, reported having intermittent internet access. These parents face challenges related to unreliable connectivity, which can impact their ability to consistently engage with online educational resources. The sporadic nature of their access may lead to difficulties in supporting their children's online learning, keeping up with school communications, and participating in virtual meetings or events. This group represented a critical area for potential intervention and support to ensure they can fully benefit from digital educational resources.

Lack of Internet Access

A smaller portion of parents, 8 out of 118, reported having no internet access. This group faces the most significant barriers in terms of digital engagement. Without internet access, these families are excluded from online learning opportunities, digital communications, and virtual support systems. This lack of access contribute to educational disparities and limit the ability of these parents to support their children's education effectively. The data revealed a spectrum of internet access among parents, with a majority having reliable access, a significant minority experiencing intermittent connectivity, and a smaller group lacking access entirely. This digital divide has important implications for educational institutions, which must strive to ensure equitable access to resources and support for all families. By addressing these disparities and adopting inclusive communication and resource distribution strategies, schools can better support the diverse needs of their parent and student communities.

Q6. Which Gadget you use mostly?

The responses from parents regarding the gadgets they use most frequently, with 1 using a laptop, 99 using a mobile phone, and 2 using both, provided significant insights into the technology preferences and habits of the parent community. Here's a detailed interpretation of the data:

Predominant Use of Mobile Phones

The overwhelming majority of parents, 99 out of 102 respondents, indicated that they primarily use mobile phones. This trend reflected the widespread adoption and convenience of mobile devices in daily life. Mobile phones offer several advantages that likely contribute to this preference:

- Portability: Mobile phones are highly portable, allowing parents to stay connected and access information on the go.
- Multi-functionality: Modern smartphones combine various functionalities, such as communication, internet access, and educational applications, making them versatile tools for parents.
- Accessibility: Mobile phones are often more affordable and accessible than laptops, making them a practical choice for many families.

A small number of parents, 2 out of 102, indicated that they use both a laptop and a mobile phone. This dual usage suggests that these parents recognize the benefits of both devices and utilize them for different purposes:

- Specialized Tasks: Laptops may be preferred for tasks requiring larger screens and more processing power, such as writing documents or participating in video conferences.
- Flexibility: Mobile phones provide flexibility for quick and convenient access, while laptops offer a more robust computing experience when needed.

Thus, the data reveals a strong preference for mobile phones among parents, with a minimal use of laptops and a few using both devices. This trend underscores the importance of mobile-friendly communication and resources in engaging parents and supporting their children's education. By prioritizing mobile accessibility and providing digital literacy support, educational institutions can effectively meet the needs of their parent community and enhance the overall educational experience.
